

Ghislain Magritte (21 November 1898 – 15 August 1967) was a Belgian surrealist artist. He became well known for a number of witty and thought-provoking images that fall under the umbrella of surrealism. His work challenges observers' preconditioned perceptions of reality.

One of his well known works is 'The Son of Man'. A man in a black suit with a green apple in front of his face is walking through the streets. Blends in with the audience, stimulating the imagination and giving that elusive abstract feel. Two man available.
